Murmurings from the Manse

I have a nose for sniffing out strange stories and this week I found one that ranks amongst the strangest. An Indian Bride married one of the guests instead of her intended husband. After I got past the intriguing headline I found out that the groom collapsed at the wedding, he suffered from some illness which he had not disclosed and so the bride decided she wasn't going to marry him and married one of the guests instead. She argued that he had lied by omission and her culture stated that their marriage 'contract' could thus be broken, so she did!

Had he lied, as we understand a lie or had he simply withheld a piece of information?

It is a grey area and it is one humanity has struggled with ever since we learnt the difference between right and wrong. Along with free will God has given His people the responsibility to make up their own minds and to live by their decisions, and that is not always easy.

We are accountable for our actions and we have to be able to justify them if challenged to do so.

We are now in Lent, with our eyes beginning to look toward Jerusalem and the cross; a time when the actions of some are highlighted and judged; but we were not there and we do not know, only at second or even third hand, but still we express our opinion, and often it is based on emotion not fact – always a dangerous reaction.

This year I would offer this suggestion for Lent, instead of giving up or taking up, pause for Lent. Pause to reflect and consider, pause to read the narrative once again and do so with fresh eyes, pause and ask yourselves what it must have been like to live through that time; and see if this Lent is then different to any other.

Yours in Christ

Sarah
